The Editor's Place

Sue Wayenberg Hinz, Alpha Gamma '67, Washington State University, has served as editor of To Dragma since June, 1980.

by Sue Lewis
Administrative Director

I have taken license this issue to steal this spot from Editor Sue Hinz for a very special reason.

All too often, we tend to thank folks when they have completed a job well done. I hope that point for our editor is a long, long way off, so I would like to publicly salute the continuing superb work of Sue Hinz as our To Dragma editor.

The Executive Board has enthusiastically appointed Sue to a third 2-year term as editor.

In the past four years, Sue has consistently produced an informative and appealing publication, balancing feature articles on fraternity highlights with news of AOII superwomen, general interest articles, and collegiate and alumnae chapter updates.

Under her leadership, To Dragma has won awards from the National Inter-Fraternity Foundation, the Washington Press Association, and the College Fraternity Editors Association.

At the 1983 convention, Council approved an increase in To Dragma life subscriptions to fund this move toward a quality publication.

These accomplishments are not surprising when you know what an outstanding journalist this Alpha Gamma AOII is in her own right.

In addition to her BA in journalism from Washington State University, Sue worked on her MS in journalism and mass communication at Iowa State University, Ames. Professionally, Sue currently serves as editor of the weekly faculty/staff newspaper for the WSU Office of University Relations.

Our editor is active in community life, serving on the Board of Directors for the Pullman United Way, providing leadership to several local public school committees, and assisting in such worthy projects as the March of Dimes, Heart Fund, and Community Child Care Center.

She has served AOII in her area as a charter member of Pullman Alumnae Chapter—later as an officer, and chapter adviser of Alpha Gamma chapter at WSU. Currently she serves as president of Alpha Gamma Corporation and president of Pullman City Panhellenic.

If you think Ginger Banks enjoys stories of her niece Amy, then you'll love Sue's musings of sons Bill, 8, and John, 12. Mom even wields a mean fielder's mitt for baseball practice!

Sue, we thank you for your wonderful work on our primary communicator, To Dragma, and look forward to at least two more years of your leadership as our editor.

Guest editor's note: I am pleased to announce that Diane Douglass, Public Relations Coordinator, will begin to assist Sue Hinz as the Headquarters liaison for To Dragma. Diane, too, has excellent background and experience in publications, and works already on other fraternity publications. I will continue as Executive Board supervisor and general mother hen, but with Sue and Diane working together, they will be a formidable team! sl

Perspectives

By Ginger Banks, International President

My niece Amy and I recently shared a wonderful experience.

Just the two of us went to see a performance by magician David Copperfield.

Since seven-year-olds don't usually miss a trick, I was hoping Amy would be able to explain to me how Mr. Copperfield manager to put a large toy duck into a box and have a live one come out. Or how Mr. Copperfield could enclose himself in a cubicle on stage and appear an instant later—live and in person—standing in an aisle in the center of the audience.

Amy had a very simple explanation for these illusions: "It's magic," she said.

What a wonderful explanation for many of life's mysteries.

How did I manage to pass an exam for which I had not studied? It's magic.

How did I manage to get that job I wanted even though I did not think I was qualified for it? It's magic.

How did I manage to get dinner on the table even though it started with the meat being frozen and the charcoal refusing to light? It's magic.

In so many areas of our lives, we may wish we could rely on magic to make all things bright and beautiful, and all our efforts successful and rewarding.

But the truth is that success and joy do not materialize because David Copperfield—or anyone else—waves a magic wand. They occur as the result of belief, organization and hard work.

When all officers understand their responsibilities and discharge them with enthusiasm and promptness, that's magic.

When all members of our chapters look for ways they can further participate in AOII activities, that's magic.

When all AOIIs realize that making personal and financial contributions to the fraternity are important and integral parts of their lives, that's magic.

Belief. Organization. Hard work.

Those are magical ingredients of success and fulfillment that even Amy and I can explain.

Editor's Note: Alumnae and collegiate chapters that have a successful fund raising project for the AOII Philanthropic Foundation are invited to send details and photos to To Dragma for use in later publications. Without the support of the alumnae and collegiate chapters the Foundation would be unable to support national research efforts so important to the fight against arthritis.
